The dissertation entitled "Implementation of the hunting economy and its impact on agricultural activity in the light of provisions of hunting law" presents an in-depth analysis of the implementation of the hunting economy in the light of current legal provisions relating to hunting. The study devotes particular attention to the mutual relations between the hunting economy and agricultural activity, emphasising the influence of the former one on the latter.

The first chapter presents issues relating to the genesis of hunting law and the principal institutions shaping the legal framework of hunting. This part of the dissertation makes the attempt to determine the legal status of the Polish Hunting Association, an issue which is subject to debate of both a doctrinal and practical nature. One aspect of this debate is the impermissibility of conducting any activities related to the hunting economy without the involvement of the Polish Hunting Association.

The second chapter covers issues directly relating to the implementation of the hunting economy. This section analyses the legal issues pertaining to the way hunting plans are formed, as well as the relationships between the hunting economy and agriculture, forestry and fishing. In addition to the aforementioned issues, the analysis encompasses the use and trade of animal carcasses in the context of food regulations, as well as breeding of game within the framework of agricultural activity. This part of the dissertation also contains an analysis of regulations relating to the eradication of zoonotic diseases, including African Swine Fever (ASF).

The third chapter of the dissertation is dedicated to the analysis of the legal status of game and the concept of hunting districts, as well as its impact on ownership of land. Particular attention was paid to the legal character of hunting districts in the context of their influence on the rights of landowners. The issues pertaining to the division of the country's territory into hunting districts and the legal nature of their lease was also analysed.

The fourth chapter of the dissertation covers the issue of legal responsibility in hunting activities. A detailed analysis was made of the institution of liability for hunting damages, with particular attention paid to its significant impact on agricultural activity. This part of the dissertation also examines legal provisions regulating liability for damages caused by wild animals, as well as the various crimes and petty offences which complete the system of responsibility in hunting activities.

The final chapter of the dissertation relates to selected issues of hunting law in the light of EU regulations, as well as a comparative study of the legal models of hunting in force in Germany and the United Kingdom.

The dissertation draws upon a wide spectrum of legal provisions, as well as numerous written works and specialised literature.
